U.S. prison population soars in 2005
Growing at a rate of about 200,000 each year, the U.S. prison population is expected to reach 2.2 million by 2010, according to a report by the U.S. Sentencing Commission. The report says that the increase is due to a combination of factors, including the passage of the 2003 federal sentencing guidelines, which increased the number of years that many offenders must serve in prison.
